Course Description

This is a course dedicated to the study of global conflict and cooperation. The general objective of the course is to help students get familiar with major approaches, theories, concepts, and substantive issues in the study of international politics. The emphasis will be on enhancing our comprehension of key theoretical perspectives and debates in the field of international relations. We will do this by closely examining both the assumptions underlying different approaches and theories and how they purport to 'explain' actual events and developments in international politics. Lectures, readings, and participation in class discussions will help students acquire the ability to understand and critically analyze major past and present issues in global politics.

The course is roughly divided into three parts. In the the first part, we will get familiar with major concepts and theories of international relations. Part two is dedicated to assessing and evaluating the utility of those theories in helping us understand the underlying causes of some major historical events of the twentieth century. In part three we will turn our attention to major contemporary issues and debates in global politics, including international law and institutions, globalization, international political economy, international security, and so on. Each class meeting will be organized in such a way as to strike the right balance between proper communication of key concepts, theories and debates and the active engagement of students with course materials. In order to achieve this objective, each meeting will include both power-point lectures and structured discussions and debates about the topic being covered.

Requirements

Course assignments have been selected with the intention of ensuring adequate breadth and depth in covering each topic. The required texts for the course are International Politics: Enduring Concepts and Contemporary Issues by Robert J. Art and Robert Jervis (Thirteenth Edition) and World Politics: Interests, Interactions, Institutions (Third Edition) by Jeffrey A. Frieden, David A. Lake, and Kenneth A. Shultz (2015), both of which are available at GU's Bookstore. Supplementary readings, including articles and book chapters, have been assigned to ensure a deeper understanding of each topic and to help generate class discussion. These supplementary readings will be posted onto the course website on Canvas.

Note that class attendance is mandatory and that you are expected to come to class having read all assigned materials. Full preparation for each class meeting is crucial given the fact that the course is condensed into five weeks, as opposed to a normal semester.

Final grade components: classroom participation (20%), a mid-term exam (40%) and a final exam (40%).
