COURSE INFORMATION

Course Description

This class will facilitate a superior understanding of Persian culture and improve linguistic competency in written and spoken Persian. Students will apply complex grammar techniques and sophisticated vocabulary during class discussions and assessments. Students will develop their Persian language skills in conjunction with exploration into the complex cultural underpinnings of the Persianate world through careful study of an amalgam of historical and modern literature, poetry, and current media. This class gives students copious opportunities to practice their highly developed Persian skills through writing, reading, listening and speaking. Students enrolling in this class ought to have successfully completed PERS 201 or have permission from the instructor. There is no pass/fail option for this course. Visiting students must take a placement exam prior to registering for this course.

Learning Outcomes

By the end of the class students will have the ability to comfortably communicate in advanced Persian about complex topics. Students will be able to accurately deliver a lengthy oral presentation and write a detailed composition on social, political, or cultural issues. Students will be able to read and summarize complex literature and media. Finally, students will be able to listen to sophisticated dialogues and precisely identify the nuances of the conversation.

Required Textbook

This course does not require a specific textbook. The instructor will provide students with pertinent learning materials from a selective collection of Georgetown resources.

Supplementary Course Materials

Various learning material posted on blackboard by the instructor
Iranian movies and documentaries via blackboard
A bilingual dictionary

Description of Instructional Methods

Students will strengthen their Persian language proficiency by participating in class discussions, reading classical literature and current media, writing compositions, and delivering presentations during the course of the semester. Topics for written compositions, presentations and general discourse may include the following: social, political, cultural. Students may determine the topic of their presentations, based on their individual interests, with final consent from the professor. Students will analyze various news articles and pieces of literature with which they will learn new vocabulary and advanced grammar techniques. Regular formative assessments and a final exam at the end of the semester will be administered.

CLASSROOM MANAGEMENT

Course organization

This class will meet five times a week, Monday through Friday, from 9am to 12.15pm.

Students can expect to be informally assessed on a weekly basis with respect to their progress with grammar, reading, writing, listening and speaking skills. Formal composition assessments will be administered weekly. Compositions will be at least four paragraphs in length. Students will deliver one formal 20 minute oral presentation on their own and multiple short oral presentations in small groups.

Language can only be learned and absorbed if it is practiced on a regular basis, inside and outside the classroom. Students are encouraged to take every opportunity to practice their Persian language skills throughout their daily routine.

Attendance

This language course requires students to attend class regularly and punctually. Successful completion of this course requires students to actively participate in class and finish all assignments in a timely manner.

Two unexcused absences will lessen a student's final grade by one letter grade. Four unexcused absences will result in failure of the course. Make-up dates may be arranged only under exceptional circumstances or with an official letter from the Dean or a doctor.
